when we hardly ever saw our extended families. Maybe, we would see them once every few years for a holiday, or maybe for a wedding or funeral. Other than that, the only time we communicated with them was via Christmas card or rare phone call. I miss that time.

Now, we have Facebook to keep us connected with EVERYONE 24/7. There are some good sides to Facebook. It's great for high school reunions and for forming neighborhood groups. It's also good for finding work related groups. For writers, it is one of the best ways to interact with other writers and find new readers. So, it does have its purposes.

On the other hand, it has some really bad points. We just get too much information about friends and family. I'm not talking about when they go to the gym or what they ate for lunch. I'm talking about things like the fact that they support Donald Trump for president. I could also do without knowing that a lot of people credit prayer for any successful surgery. Why even go to the doctor if God is so good? It was SO MUCH better when I just didn't know these things.

something productive. SOMETIMES, I speak my mind. This usually ends up beginning a family feud, and not the fun game show kind. I'm not alone in this. I have witnessed my share of other people's feuds and they always fit into one of these categories.

Most of the time I grit my teeth and move on, or get the heck off of Facebook and do Sibling "Love" - This is when siblings obviously don't like each other, but attempt to post "just kidding" statuses.

"You always reminded me of a baby rhino. Smiley face."

"I always knew where my brother was by the trail of boogers on the wall. Lol."

Vote Cancellation - I'm one of three Democrats in my family, so I see this one a lot.

not racist. I just want to make America great again, like Nazi Germany was."

Outing the Awkward - Sometimes family members post "favorite" pictures of each other. In this case, favorite means heinous.

"I voted for Trump because my stupid, libtard sister prolly voted for that Jewish guy. I'm

"Here's my favorite picture of my lovely sister. Doesn't she look great with headgear?"

Because Jesus - For some folks, faith is more important than being loving and supportive to family.

"I don't approve of your gayness because I love the lord. I don't hate you; I hate the sin.

Mom Says - I know parents say they don't have favorites, but they usually do. The

"These bar pictures that you post all the time are the reason mom doesn't invite you to dinner. Mom said she wonders how you ever got married with those teeth. You should've worn your headgear more."

Fugly Fortune - When parents or grandparents die, there is usually some kind of argument over the inheritance.

"Grandpa wanted ME to have his Joan Rivers egg collection."

"Did you buy that new car with that money you stole from me?"

a gift at the last four showers don't bother buying anything."

Pregnant Again - In a lot of families, there is always that one person who just won't stop branching the family tree.

"We are throwing a baby shower for my sister and her latest baby daddy. If you gave her

I know you all have seen these special arguments on Facebook. You may have even had these arguments. How could you not when everyone's thoughts and opinions are in your face all of the time. I think this is why Zuckerberg chose to call it FACEbook. Have you
